Headline:
Storm Evert moving east across England and Wales. Drier elsewhere.

Today:
Storm Evert bringing very unsettled weather with rain or showers, some heavy and thundery across England and Wales where unseasonably windy in the south and southeast. Winds slowly easing from the west. A few showers elsewhere but with brighter skies.

Tonight:
Storm Evert will clear east allowing central parts to become mostly dry with clear spells while occasional showers continue to affect the east and west.

Saturday:
Occasional sunny intervals but also showers, these becoming heavy and thundery across eastern, central and southeastern parts of England. Less windy.

Outlook for Sunday to Tuesday:
A mixed picture with further showers, mainly in the south and the best of any dry weather across the north. Temperatures mainly at or a little below average.
